(c) No, Sir.

(d) Does not arise.

(e) In terms of the existing agreements, the Government has an option recurring at intervals of ten years to purchase these lines. The question of taking over these lines was considered individually in 1986. It was noted that these Railways were incurring recurring losses. Besides, in the areas served by these lines, competing road services were available in a large measure. It was, not, therefore, considered opportune to exercise the option.
